PREFACE.

This third of my five sales, ought, in accordance with the preface to the Catalogue of the first sale, to have taken place in the autumn of 1881. It has been postponed on account of much occupation, private and professional, and now occurs a twelve-month after its appointed time.

Exempted from haste and hurry, in consequence of this delay, I have endeavored to compile an interesting, accurate, and properly minute, but not too ample, Catalogue of the Third Part of my Cabinet, a part not inferior in value and importance to either of those which have preceded it on the path of dispersion. I have taken pains that this Catalogue may gain the approval of critics, and that purchasers may find nothing in it exaggerated or over-described. The latter will undoubtedly be attracted by the great rarity of a large number of the specimens, and the excellent condition of nearly all; and I confidently expect from their intelligence and judgment a renewal of the interest testified on the two preceding occasions.

The interval following the present sale, may perhaps be lengthened, like the one just passed, since an attempt will be made to dispose of the entire Fourth Part of the Cabinet, comprising ancient Coins exclusively, by private sale, in mass, to some institution, educational or other; and that may lead to protracted negotiation. In case of its failure, the public sale will take place as announced; while, in the event of a private sale, printed Catalogues of the Fourth Part will nevertheless be supplied to those who may desire the complete Catalogue of the Cabinet, which is ultimately to be formed by combining the five parts.

May many a member of the numismatic brotherhood obtain many a satisfactory acquisition from among the very important, instructive, and artistic productions now to be scattered, and enjoy, in his turn, the entertainment and information which they have yielded to previous owners.

CHARLES E. ANTHON.

NUMISMATIC BOOKS ILLUSTRATING THIS PART OF THE CABINET.

This valuable collection of books, far surpassing in importance any other of the kind, offered as yet at an auction in this country, may occasion disappointment for the reason that very nearly all of them are in the German language. But so it has to be. In almost every mine of modern knowledge the diligent and accurate German is the great accumulator of material. The laborious bee of Germany, according to one of her own poets,

"Gathers, on every field, honey; and knows not for whom."

Translations, it is true, furnish, in many cases, a key to unlock these treasures, but the path of Numismatics is so peculiar, so untravelled except by the few elect, that no other guide can sometimes here be obtained than an actual knowledge of the language in question. More particularly must this be the case when, as here, the subject is that of German Numismatics and other branches of the science akin thereto. Eckhel wrote his "Doctrina Numorum Veterum" in Latin; Mionnet and many another famous writer, French or English, have written in their respective mother-tongues on the same theme; but Madai on German Dollars can be read in German only. In general, however, a very deep knowledge of it is not required for numismatic investigations; while the engravings with which most of the books are amply illustrated will prove a great aid in the solution of difficult problems.

The German Sale-Catalogues, of which a list is appended to that of the books, are worthy of notice, not merely because they are models in their way, that of the Schulthess-Rechberg collection, by the Erbsteins, easily taking the lead, but because many of them are priced, showing in divers instances the source whence some of the best specimens in this cabinet have been obtained, and affording, in several, an opportunity to compare the sums they have commanded, here and abroad. The interest attaching to a coin or medal is much enhanced also if it be known to have belonged to a famous amateur like the one above-mentioned.

A few other Catalogues, such as the celebrated one of Welzl von Wellenheim, have been reserved to subsequent Parts of this Sale, inasmuch as they are largely devoted to Ancient Numismatics or American.
